MGGA Plans Listening Sessions

MGGA will hold 9 listening sessions around the state this fall to give producers an opportunity to let the organization know what's on their mind.

“MGGA policy is created at the grass roots level,” said President Rob Davis of Larslan, “and we depend on our members to give us direction. Each farming community has different priorities and these sessions give us an opportunity to learn about local concerns and issues.”

Federal farm program development is also an important MGGA policy priority and, even though we're just beginning to experience the programs implemented in 2014, it's already time to begin planning for the next Farm Bill. We need to hear how current programs are working and what provisions should be reformed.

Make plans now to attend a listening session in your area.
